VIDEO GAMES NEWS & REVIEWS

Today we have news on the next release in the Call of Duty Franchise! While Activision has already confirmed a new Call of Duty is coming this year, it hasn't shared any details whatsoever. However, according to a tweet that has since been corroborated by Eurogamer, this year's game will be called Call of Duty: Black Ops Cold War. It will be the fifth main game in the Black Ops series, but will be the first to go back to go significantly back in time since the original Black Ops, as the series has gotten progressively more futuristic over the years.

Furthermore, if you are on PS4 there is more good news for Call of duty fans! PlayStation Plus Members can now grab one of June's free games, Call of Duty: WWII. Even if you do not have much room in your hard drive you can download this game and delete it if necessary. Doing this will add it to your library and allow you to redownload it for free anytime. The second freebie will be announced later this week, and we imagine it will go live on June 2, the first Tuesday of the month.

HOOOOP, THERE IT IS!!

Mr. Zacarias: Academic Instructor

It seems very likely now that the NBA season will resume sometime in July after a four-month hiatus due to Covid-19. NBA officials are in negotiations with Walt Disney World in Orlando to be the official site of the NBA's "Bubble City" to crown an NBA Champion. Currently, it is unclear if the NBA will bring all 30 teams back to complete the season, or just go straight into the playoffs which would only require 16 teams.

Over the weekend, ESPN's Brian Windhorst offered an update of what could be the plans of the league for the restart of the season. He said on 'Get Up!' that there is a "good chance" that the league will use a 16-team format for the playoffs, regardless of the conferences.

This will be a big change to the NBA playoff format and will actually allow certain teams to join in the post season tournament, while, at the same time, remove other teams that thought they would be in the playoffs. The possible bracket for this scenario is pictured below.
